

Opposites Attract (But There's a Deadline!)

We've all heard it said ... "Opposites attract," right? But then we find ourselves intertwined with one of those Opposites, and before too long, those once oh-so-attractive opposite traits slowly begin to drive us crazy! What happened? How did the thrill those opposites once brought turn to annoying irritations? How did the person who once so captivated us turn into our nemesis?

Could the Opposites Attract Theory be flawed? If so, then how do we explain the positive excitement and energy we feel when we're discovering the fun of The Opposite? Maybe it's not that the theory is flawed; perhaps there is simply a balance to be struck.

Here's an interesting thought: typically, we enjoy conversations with like-minded people. Those with whom we disagree create a certain level of stress. However, when it comes to personalities, variety is often exciting! In fact, if we could chart a seasoned couple (one who has moved beyond the doped-up, just-falling-in-love phase) who would describe themselves as being very happy together, we would commonly find they would make a strong case for both claims, "Opposites attract," AND "Opposites Repel." Contradictory? Yes ... and fascinating!

This means that whether you find yourself with an extreme opposite or with a near-twin, your relationship together can be amazingly successful! And getting there is easier than you might think.
